Stop-the-clock secrets

Today's plastic surgery techniques are more effective than ever.

NO MORE UNDEREYE BAGS

Until now, surgery was the only way to banish this kind of puffiness. But Dr. Michael E. Sachs, has developed a new method called fat evaporation, which vaporizes the fatty tissue. Besides eliminating the risk of bleeding, this painless technique allows for faster healing, better and more natural shaping of the eyelid and longer-lasting results.

PLASTIC SURGERY: URBAN RENEWAL

In case you hadn't noticed, New York women are getting better looking every day. No, it's not something in the air or even in the famed drinking water. Everyone, it seems, is getting fixed, lifted or tucked in one place or another, perhaps by these much-in-demand top surgeons.

Michael Evan Sachs, M.D. "A woman's profession is the prime factor in what she chooses to 'have done,' according to this specialist in facial plastic surgery. "Lawyers actually like the character that a large or uncommon nose gives their faces. Their eyelids, however are something else again. Since making direct eye contact with clients and juries is crucial, they have to look alert and on top of things," he explains. "Women doctors are reluctant to change their appearance and often wait until they've retired to have cosmetic procedures performed. I think they feel that their success should be based on everything but their looks.

"Wall Streeters, by contrast, don't hesitate to act: They're used to making things happen. And since most are fairly young, they're likely to be less concerned with aging than with their noses or skin. They decide on surgery quickly, the same way they made their business decisions."

Dr. Sachs compares New York City to a string of tiny neighborhoods tied together by geography, profession and social standing – and a surgeon's successes and failures are immediately communicated throughout this network. "Women in the highest social stratum are exceptionally knowledgeable about the latest techniques. Their good opinion is the Oscar of distinction."

WRINKLE FREE FOREVER?

Researchers working on longer-lasting line-fixers are looking to a patient's own body for regeneration, according to Dr. Michael Evan Sachs.
